CHICAGO, MO., Feb. 17, 1872.

THE BLIND CHILD.

O sister dear, come go with me

Into the leafy grove,

Where I can hear, but cannot see,

And tell me of the flowers

Which bloom so sweetly here.

While we shall walk to wildwood haunts,

And nature's songsters hear.

What color are the little birds

That sing so sweetly here?

Dear sister, tell me, I beg,

And let me hear thee sing.

Oh, could I see thee pretty forms

As round and round they fly!

Oh, could I see the trees and flowers,

The brooklet and the sky!

Then with what rapture would I gaze

On everything around.

I'd walk the forest and the glade,

And see the lambskins bound.

But stop! I will not murmur, No!

For God to me is kind.

He lets me hear and feel and think,

Although I'm blind.

I HATE A FOOL.

SALLY JERUSA STOKES.

I hate a fool like pizen—

Brags at a thief,

And a liar for all

Brings other folks to grief;

I hate a noising gossip,

Who's busy with his mouth

Pokes into people's business

Terrible as a thief.

I hate their spiteful scandal,

No matter how it's fixed—

With gossip, lies and hearsays

Benighted and mixed.

And dealt out free as water

In long frozen rains;

And may the King of Britons

Reward 'em for their pains.

I hate a drunkard,

A loafer and a dandy,

And a kid-glove dandy,

Who's busy with his mouth

Pokes into people's business

Terrible as a thief.

I hate a dandy,

Who's busy with his mouth

Pokes into people's business

Terrible as a thief.

I hate a dandy,
